EMAILS SUGGEST TRUMP JR WELCOMED RUSSIAN HELP

1 Presidential candidate Donald Trump's eldest son eagerly agreed last year to meet a woman he was told was a Russian government lawyer who might have information incriminating Democratic rival Hillary Clinton as part of Moscow's official support for his father, according to an email chain released on Tuesday. The emails in the chain were between Donald Trump Jr., who posted it on Twitter, and Rob Goldstone, a publicist who helped to arrange the June 9, 2016, meeting with Natalia Veselnitskaya, who says she is a private lawyer and denies having Kremlin ties. "If it's what you say I love it," Trump Jr. said in a June 3, 2016 email that was part of the chain arranging the meeting.

16 SERVICE MEMBERS KILLED IN PLANE CRASH

2 U.S. officials were investigating the cause of a military transport plane crash that killed 16 service members a day earlier, leaving a 5-mile trail of wreckage in rural northern Mississippi. The KC-130 Hercules aircraft disappeared from air traffic control radar over Mississippi after taking off from Cherry Point, North Carolina. It plunged into a field at approximately 4 p.m. on Monday in Mississippi's LeFlore County, about 100 miles north of Jackson, the state capital. Fifteen Marines and one Navy sailor were onboard, the U.S. Marine Corps said. The names of the deceased were being withheld until family members were notified. Further details on the crash were not released by military officials, but Gen. Robert Neller, Commandant of the Marine Corps, pledged "a thorough investigation into the cause of this tragedy."

US MISSILE HITS TEST TARGET AS TENSION RISES

3 The United States said on Tuesday it shot down a simulated, incoming intermediate-range ballistic missile similar the ones being developed by countries like North Korea, in a new test of the nation's defenses. Planned months ago, the U.S. missile defense test over the Pacific Ocean has gained significance after North Korea's July 4 launch of an intercontinental ballistic missile heightened concerns about the threat from Pyongyang. The test was the first-ever of the Terminal High Altitude Area Defense system against an incoming IRBM, which experts say is a faster and more difficult target to hit than shorter-range missiles. The U.S. Missile Defense Agency said the IRBM was designed to behave similarly to the kinds of missiles that could threaten the United States.

GROUP SUES TRUMP FOR BLOCKING TWITTER USERS

5 A free-speech group on Tuesday sued Donald Trump for blocking Twitter users from his @realDonaldTrump account, arguing the practice violates the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The lawsuit, brought by the Knight First Amendment Institute at Columbia University in New York and joined by seven individual Twitter users, claims Trump blocked a number of accounts whose owners replied to his tweets with comments that criticized, mocked or disagreed with the president. Trump's blocking of the accounts amounted to an unconstitutional effort to suppress dissent, according to the lawsuit filed in federal court in the Southern District of New York. Because Trump frequently turns to Twitter to make policy statements, his account qualifies as a public forum from which the government cannot exclude people on the basis of their views, according to the lawsuit.

Donald Trump Jr. emails may be evidence of crime, experts say

Emails could be the "smoking gun" that the Trump campaign was colluding with Russia.

ERIN TIERNAN
@ErinTiernan
erin.tiernan@metro.us

Donald Trump Jr.'s emails released on Tuesday offer fairly clear evidence that the president's son broke campaign finance law, according to legal experts.

It is illegal to solicit or accept campaign contributions from foreign nationals. Campaign contributions are defined as "anything of value," which includes information and political opposition research.

In emails the president's eldest son posted to Twitter just as The New York Times published an exposé, he explains he met with a Russian lawyer last June to get "incriminating" information on Hillary Clinton.

In the email thread with a subject line that read, "Russia — Clinton — private and confidential," Trump Jr. wrote that he'd "love" to get the information that a mutual contact of Trump and the Russians said would "incriminate Hillary and her dealings with Russia and would be very useful to" his father.

Rick Hasen, a campaign finance expert and law professor at University of California, Irvine, said it's "hard to see how there is not a serious case here of solicitation."

"Trump Jr. appears to have knowledge of the foreign source and is asking to see it," he said.

Norm Eisen, special counsel for ethics and government reform under former President Barack Obama, said the Donald Trump Jr. email "clearly violates campaign finance law and likely implicates Don Jr. and campaign under conspiracy statute."

President Donald Trump, however, defended his son, calling him a "high-quality person."

In an off-camera afternoon White House briefing, Deputy Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders read a prepared statement from the president.

"My son is a high-quality person, and I applaud his transparency," the statement read. Trump had so far been silent on the growing controversy around the meeting last summer, which went public on Saturday.

Washington-based government watchdogs Common Cause filed complaints with the Federal Election Commission and the Justice Department on Tuesday asking them to investigate Trump Jr. for soliciting a foreign contribution.

"Whether or not he actually received that information does not matter in the eyes of the law. Trump's solicitation of the information is what constitutes the violation," Paul S. Ryan, Common Cause vice president for policy and litigation, said in a statement.

The emails refer to "some official documents," and Ryan said if Trump Jr. accepted any documents as a campaign contribution from a foreign national, it would be an additional crime.

A spokesman for Robert Mueller, the special counsel investigating allegations of collusion between the Trump campaign and the Russian government, declined to comment, the HuffPost reported.

Residents hope Imagine Boston 2030 helps establish sense of community

At the launch of the final Imagine Boston 2030 draft, residents spoke of wanting a stronger community.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

No matter which way residents approached the Imagine Boston 2030 launch event in Upham's Corner on Tuesday, they were greeted with something local and creative.

On one street, a local musician performed in front of the Strand Theater; down another alley, Dorchester business owners set up booths hawking their handmade wares, and from another side, pedestrians passed through street blockades where Boston high school students were painting a mural right on the road.

The students were part of the Mayor's Mural Crew, an initiative that gives young Boston artists summer jobs. Though technically separate from Imagine Boston 2030, the high school kids who were painting a traditional Cape Verdean textile pattern on the asphalt were actually carrying out part of the plan: to improve local culture with arts innovation districts that strengthen local art hubs, starting with Upham's Corner.

"[We're painting] the Cape Verdean weaving to really spruce up the culture around here and show people that we do see their culture," said Jonathan Lopez Wilen, an 18-year-old artist who's been involved with the mural crew for four years.

"We don't want them to not have their culture here since, you know, it's becoming gentrified," and changing, he added.

Multiple initiatives within Imagine Boston 2030, the first citywide large-scale planning effort in 50 years, overlap in Upham's Corner — like creating better access to the waterfront and focusing on affordable housing. That's part of the reason it was the setting for the event launching the final draft of the document, said Natalia Urtubey, director of engagement for Imagine Boston 2030.

Still, the plan and the event are for all Boston residents to enjoy, even if they aren't in Upham's Corner. Quiana Agbai, a 36-year-old mom of two, lives in Hyde Park, but still came to the event.

"My husband and I attended the local meetings, so when I saw the sign [that said Imagine Boston 2030], I remembered that, and saw this as something the kids could be a part of," she said.

Agbai recently moved back after about nine years away, now with a family. She was interested in Imagine Boston 2030, she said, because "I wanted, now that we have a permanent home here in Boston, to give the kids a sense of community."

Concetta Johnson, 62, echoed that longing. Johnson was manning a table covered in handmade jewelry from her local business, Inspired Creations. She's lived in Dorchester all her life, she said.

"I think there's been a lack of community, because the neighborhood is more transient," she said.

Johnson has seen how new people moving in, who only stay a short while, don't establish the same connections with their neighbors. Imagine Boston 2030 can be a way to change that and get people connected over goals within their communities .

"I hope this brings people together," she said.

Iranian cancer researcher traveling to work at Boston Children's detained

The research scholar has been held at Logan Airport with his wife and children.

An Iranian doctor traveling to work with Boston Children's Hospital has been detained at Logan Airport, the hospital announced on Tuesday.

Boston Children's said Dr. Mohsen Dehnavi is a visiting cancer research scholar with a J-1 visa, a nonimmigrant visa issued to research scholars, professors and those pursuing work- and study-based exchange programs.

Dehnavi has been detained while traveling with his wife and three children. They are scheduled to be sent back to Iran later on Tuesday, according to the hospital.

"Boston Children's hopes that this situation will be quickly resolved and Dr. Dehnavi and his family will be released and allowed to enter the U.S.," Boston Children's said in a statement. "The hospital is committed to doing its utmost to support Dr. Dehnavi and his family."

The Supreme Court recently ruled that the Trump administration could partially enforce an executive order banning people from several majority Muslim countries, also known as the travel ban or the Muslim ban. Iran is one of the countries on that list.

The Supreme Court's version of the travel ban said that non-U.S. citizens seeking entry from Iran, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria and Yemen will still be allowed to enter the country if they have family here, work here or go to school here. Those looking for travel visas or refuge will be barred from entering the U.S.

However, a representative for the U.S. Customs and Border Protection said in a statement to the Boston Globe that the government can deny entry into the U.S. for many reasons, from health-related grounds to security to immigration violations.

> "The hospital is committed to doing its utmost to support Dr. Dehnavi and his family."
> Boston Children's Hospital

"All travelers arriving to the United States must possess valid travel documents; however, it is important to note that issuance of a visa or a visa waiver does not guarantee entry to the United States," the statement continued. "A [customs] officer at the port of entry will conduct an inspection to determine if the individual is eligible for admission under U.S. immigration law."

While opposed, Baker says mind open on sanctuary status

Gov. Charlie Baker, not wanting to undercut a brand-new Latino advisory panel sworn in Monday, said he would be a "hard sell" on legislation to make Massachusetts a sanctuary state, but admitted it wouldn't be the first time he's changed his mind.

The bill, known as the Safe Communities Act, would prohibit state and local police from asking about a person's immigration status or arresting someone solely because of their immigration status. It would also ban police from holding immigrants on a federal detainer if they had no other cause to do so.

Gov. Baker recently established a new Latino Advisory Commission. FILE PHOTO

"I've said many times that I think that decision should be made at the local level, but I'm an open-minded guy. I've been known to change my mind about things before," Baker said at a press conference where he signed an executive order establishing a new Latino Advisory Commission.

The bill has a significant amount of support within the Legislature, although it has not emerged for a vote in either branch. Critics have derided it as de facto "sanctuary state" legislation that would put law-abiding citizens at risk.

Baker thus far has been consistent in his opposition to the bill filed by Sen. Jamie Eldridge and Rep. Juana Matias, and reiterated Monday that based on his experience as a selectman in Swampscott and conversations with local officials on this issue that he gets "very nervous" about the idea of taking away the ability for local officials to make decisions on law enforcement for their own communities.

"That said, you don't put a commission like this together with this kind of talent if you don't expect them to talk about and address some difficult issues and I certainly expect them to do that and I look forward to their recommendations," Baker said.

A senior aide to Baker said the governor's comment do not reflect any shift in the administration's position toward the legislation.

The 27-member commission, chaired by Employee Benefit Solutions Senior Partner Josie Martinez, is expected to advise the governor on policies that would make a difference in improving employment, educational and other opportunities in the Latino community.

The executive order follows the creation in February of a similar commission to work with the administration on issues of importance to black communities around the state. The Latino Advisory Commission will meet at least quarterly and submit a formal written report on its work and recommendations to the governor every two years.

Martinez said her goal will be to remove obstacles that her parents had to overcome, including discrimination and language barriers, when they emigrated from Cuba in 1962 with her three older brothers.

"The mission of the Latino Advisory Commission is to hopefully make that path smoother and easier for those that are struggling to make Massachusetts their home and those that will follow in the same footsteps," Martinez said.

Jennifer Garner is nobody's fool

Just three months after Ben Affleck and Jennifer Garner filed for divorce in April, not-as-sad Batman has a new, er, Lady Robin. Last week, People reported that the 44-year-old actor and "Saturday Night Live" producer Lindsay Shookus are officially an item.

Apparently the two lovebirds have a bit of a history together. Multiple sources told Us Weekly that the two had an affair back in 2013, two years prior to Ben and Jen's separation in 2015. And now we've learned that Garner knew about their illicit history, and confronted Shookus about it back in 2015.

Apparently the "Dallas Buyers Club" actress was on a work trip and straight up asked Shookus about canoodling with her former husband — pre-separation. The 37-year-old "refused to back down or quit the affair," according to a source. Rude.

May we suggest that Garner seeks the ultimate revenge and find herself a rebound? Live a little, girl.

Dwayne Johnson is closer to running for POTUS

As you may recall, Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson — star of not-that-good "Baywatch," and maybe also your dreams, I don't know — can't stop talking about running for president. It appears, basically, that once y'all elected Donald Trump, Johnson had the epiphany that any old inexperienced person could run for the highest office in America.

Now, we're getting an itty bit closer to the real thing.

The Hill reports that campaign committee "Run the Rock 2020" filed on Johnson's behalf to draft him for the 2020 election. The form was filed by Kenton Tilford, and nobody knows who he is and how or if he even knows the Rock. Also, LOL, what kind of name is Kenton?

No word from The Rock yet, or whether or not this is his doing, but at this point, having a wrestler-turned-actor-turned-politician wouldn't be the worst thing to happen to our country. Especially seeing as our current presidency is akin to a poorly scripted reality show as is.

I don't care about this Lena Dunham drama

Leave Lamby alone!
ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Have you heard? Lena Dunham has been involved in a light scandal concerning her pup, Lamby. The news coverage is endless, and I'm over here wondering: Why should we care about a lady and the dog she decided to give up after maybe reinventing his biography and history?

After endless back and forth between Dunham via Instagram, BARC (the facility where she adopted Lamby) and the Zen Dog, where Dunham surrendered Lamby after four years of challenging behavior, the woman who adopted Lamby took her own turn to speak out.

She confirmed, of course, that Lamby is "living a great life!" And "showing tremendous progress!"

Here's the thing: Why are we talking about this at all? Dunham definitely tends to be an easy target — what, with her endless bevy of ignorant comments and continuing to act like race isn't really a thing — but damn, over this dog who is just trying to mind his business and live his new life?

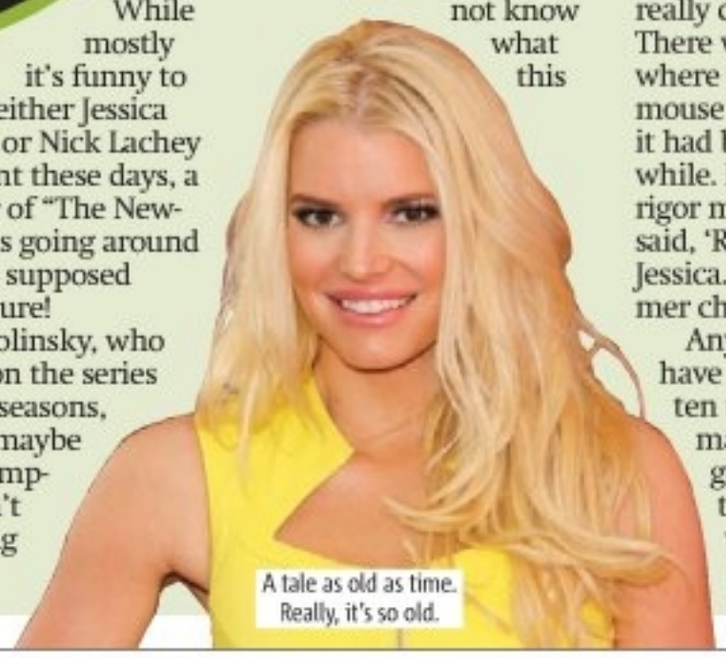
Let Lamby live, y'all.

"Newlyweds" producer spills on Jessica Simpson

While mostly it's funny to think of either Jessica Simpson or Nick Lachey as relevant these days, a producer of "The Newlyweds" is going around exposing supposed secrets. Sure!

Sue Kolinsky, who worked on the series all three seasons, said she maybe thinks Simpson wasn't just acting like a dumb blonde.

"There were times when we were like, 'Hmm, does she really not know what this means?'" she said. "I truly believe the whole 'chicken and fish' situation was accurate. She really did not know. There was a scene where there was a dead mouse by their pool and it had been dead for a while. Nick said, 'it's in rigor mortis' and Jessica said, 'Riga-what?'" Oh, Jessica. You sweet summer child.



A tale as old as time.
Really, it's so old.

Anyway, the two have probably forgotten they were ever married, so we can go back to pretending "Newlyweds" never even existed.

Andrea Savage on redefining the sitcom mom

When Andrea Savage created "I'm Sorry," she took inspiration from comedies that deal with the realities of everyday life, like "Master of None" and "Louie." "I wanted to do a pure comedy," says the writer and "Veep" actress over the phone. "It shows a couple that actually likes each other and gets a kick out of each other, because you don't see that. Everyone's miserable on TV."

So what does a non-miserable television series look like? With "I'm Sorry," it's a decidedly light and raunchy take on your standard sitcom. The series, premiering July 12 on TruTV, follows a semi-fictionalized Savage in her day-to-day life in Los Angeles — from coffee sessions with her writing partner to cringe-worthy brunches with her family.

Savage took inspiration for her series from hits like "Louie" and "Master of None." TRUTV/SCOTT EVERETT WHITE

Savage, who got her start by performing in musical theater, caught the comedy bug later than most. While studying political science at Cornell, she took an acting class — where she met future "SNL" alum Chris Parnell — and he persuaded her to join famed improv troupe the Groundlings. And the rest, as they say, is history.

Fast-forward a couple of decades, and Savage is a comedy veteran of both television and film. And with "I'm Sorry" she's exploring her own life, piece by piece. "I wanted to write a nuanced multi-dimensional woman who is 40 and who happens to be a mom — but that isn't the only defining thing about her," she continues. "I don't ever take the piss out of anyone but myself."

Fret not, though: "I'm Sorry" may have its moments of nuance, but it's not without its naughty sides.

The third episode, for example, features a character who considers ice in her, uh, rear orifice foreplay. And it's based on a real-life experience Savage had with a friend of a friend. "I was so fascinated," she says in awe. "I hope people sort of know that [these outrageous situations] are real. If you know it's real, then you're like, 'Well it's not so crazy.'" RACHAEL CLEMMONS

"The B-Side" debuts in Boston this week.

Opens July 14, Kendall Square Cinema, 355 Binney St., Cambridge, landmarktheatres.com

After examining the lives and secrets of murderers and sociopaths in many of his past award-winning films, Errol Morris now turns his attention to a more personal subject in "The B-Side: Elsa Dorfman's Portrait Photography."

The Oscar winner's latest documentary, which debuts in Boston on July 14, puts the spotlight on his longtime friend and Cambridge photography legend Elsa Dorfman. While Morris admits that his previous work has mostly dealt with subjects grappling with self deception, "The B-Side" is more of a celebration of the famed Polaroid portraitist's legacy.

"This is a study of someone I really like," says the 69-year-old filmmaker. "I liked Elsa long before I decided to make a movie about her. Much to my amazement, I still like her, so that hasn't changed really."

In the film, Morris peels back the curtain on the photographer's decades-long career, offering an intimate look at her Cambridge studio as well as peeks inside the artist's extensive collection and archives. Besides her array of rare photos and tape recordings, Dorfman's infectious personality is also put on full display.

Usually working out of her backyard workshop not too far from Harvard Square, Dorfman has photographed some of the biggest artistic names over the years. She earned praise for her 1974 book "Elsa's Housebook — A Woman's Photojournal," which featured potraits of famous faces like Beat poet Allen Ginsberg, actor Peter Orlovsky and others. Dorfman has also photographed music icons like Bob Dylan and Aerosmith frontman Steven Tyler.

The acclaimed photographer, known for her large prints and use of the Polaroid 20 by 24 inch camera, admits that her notable subjects left a big impact on her as an artist.

"You know what influenced me the most — this sounds corny – but [Jack] Kerouac, Ginsberg," Dorfman says. "I brought that back with me when I left New York and went back to Boston."

Considering how today's generation focuses on selfies and ephemeral social media posts, one can understand why Dorfman is a bit worried for the future of photography.

"I can't understand it," Dorfman says. "I can understand wanting to take digital pictures, but I can't understand not wanting to take them off the telephone and putting them in a book or a narrative. It's beyond me."

While Morris agrees that the current technological approach to photos is radically different from how past artists used the medium, he believes the artform is constantly evolving as well. Drawing connections to how photos were taken in the past, Morris thinks that it's difficult to predict where things will go in the future.

"We think in the 19th century, people just took a handful of photographs, but they took millions of photographs, a lot of which have vanished," he says. "What will get preserved and what will get lost in this sea of digital photography, it's hard to say."

PATS WILL BE GREAT FOREVER

What will things look like for the Patriots three years from now?

They'll look pretty damn good, according to ESPN's "NFL Future Power Rankings," which ranks all the teams in the NFL in terms of future prospects. The Pats rank No. 1 out of the 32 teams.

ESPN did this based on a formula of overall roster projections (Pats rank No. 1), quarterback (Pats rank No. 7 because of Brady's age and the unknown of Jimmy Garoppolo), coaching (again No. 1), drafting (tied for ninth), and front office (again, No. 1).

The Seattle Seahawks came in at No. 2 in the rankings, followed by the Atlanta Falcons and Green Bay Packers.

MESSY SITUATION

Former WWE heavyweight champion Alberto Del Rio is being investigated for domestic battery after an incident at a Florida airport. Police would not confirm the name of the alleged victim, but witnesses say Del Rio was at the airport with his girlfriend, former WWE Divas champion Paige.

An audio tape of Del Rio and Paige at the airport was released Tuesday by TMZ, with Paige telling Del Rio, "leave me the f— alone."

Paige's wrestling career has taken a nosedive since she began dating Del Rio, and she has violated the WWE's "wellness policy" twice in the past year. A sex tape involving Paige and current WWE star Xavier Woods and former wrestler Brad Maddox was also leaked this year.

MIGGY TO BOSTON?

Expect Red Sox boss Dave Dombrowski to place a phone call or two to his former place of employment over the next few weeks regarding a potential trade for Miguel Cabrera. The Tigers would absolutely have to send money the Red Sox' way (much like the Sox sent cash to the Dodgers in the great purge of 2012) to make this work, as the Red Sox are already the team with the third highest payroll in baseball.

Cabrera's contract is the third highest in MLB as he will earn $28 million this season and that figure will increase to $32 million by the time he's 40 years old. He is signed with Detroit through the 2023 season, making this an extremely risky proposition for any rich team — including Boston.

The Tigers have recently been considered one of those wealthy franchises, as they are right behind the Red Sox in MLB payroll, in fourth place. Unlike the Red Sox, who are in first place in the AL East at the MLB All-Star break, the Tigers aren't getting the same bang for their buck though.

Detroit is 39-40 this season in the putrid AL Central, eight games behind the Cleveland Indians.

Cabrera is having a down year, as he currently owns a .264 batting average. He has 11 home runs and 41 RBIs, with an OBP of .357. Since 2004, Cabrera has driven in at least 100 runs per season with the exception of 2015 when he only played in 119 games (he still had 76 RBIs that year). He bashed 38 home runs last season and drove in 108 runs while posting a .316 batting average. Cabrera has also been extremely durable in his career, having played in at least 145 games in each season since 2004 (again minus 2015 when he missed a chunk of time with a calf strain).

LEBRON WATCH

The Lakers may have some competition in their pursuit of LeBron James next summer in the form of LeBron's former team, the Miami Heat.

On ESPN, NBA Lockdown podcast host Jorge Sedano said a LeBron — Heat reunion was a decent possibility.

"Pat Riley is a go big or go home kind of guy," Sedano said (via SliceMiami.com). "I look at Pat and he's saying to himself 'I want to create enough mobility for myself with my roster and some flexibility where I can have some cap space for next year in the big 2018 free agency class and have some tradeable commodities to be able to maybe create some space because I think – and this is just my guess – Pat Riley's trying for a LeBron reunion. He's trying for the banana boat tour, the banana boat boys, in Miami."

LeBron, Dwyane Wade, Carmelo Anthony and Chris Paul are all eligible to become free agents next summer. LeBron has said in the past that he wants to close out his career playing with his buddies.

FANTASY BASEBALL: THE DUDS OF 2017 SO FAR

Kyle Schwarber has been brutal this season for the Cubs. GETTY IMAGES

Last week, we looked at the best bargains of the first half. Today, we'll cover the players who haven't lived up to their draft cost thus far.

OPINION

Catcher: Jonathan Lucroy, Rangers (ADP: 56)
Lucroy suffered through an injury-marred 2015, but enjoyed the best season of his career last year, hitting .292 with 24 homers, 81 RBI, and even chipping in five stolen bases. The pendulum has swung violently in 2017, as he's put up a middling .256/.303/.364 line with just four home runs. While Lucroy is making more contact than ever before, it's frequently been of the weak variety, and he's having trouble elevating the ball.

First Base: Miguel Cabrera, Tigers (ADP: 16)
For more than a decade, Cabrera has been among the game's most reliable stars. From 2004 to 2016, he averaged the following line: .323 AVG, 99 R, 33 HR, 115 RBIs, 3 SB. Combined with extreme durability (his first-ever stint on the disabled list came in 2015), this production made him arguably the safest asset in fantasy. Unfortunately, this season has been a much different story. Cabrera has already landed on the DL once and has admitted that he's playing through multiple injuries right now. That explains his merely mortal performance: .267/.356/.444 with just 11 homers.

Second Base: Jonathan Villar, Brewers (ADP: 21)
Villar broke out in a big way last season, leading the majors with 62 stolen bases while also batting .285, scoring 92 runs, and hitting 19 homers. He's been one of the worst everyday players in baseball this season, hitting just .213 and on pace for half as many steals.

Third Base: Manny Machado, Orioles (ADP: 9)
Machado's counting stats aren't too bad – he's on pace for another 35 HR season and about 90 RBIs — but he's been a big batting average drain this year. A player with his contact ability should never be hitting .228. There's a bit of poor luck at play here, but Machado has also seen his pop-up rate climb and shown an extreme pull tendency on his grounders, both of which will suppress batting average.

Shortstop: Trevor Story, Rockies (ADP: 30)
Story dominated as a rookie, posting a .272-67-27-72-8 line in just 97 games before injury ended his season. Like the last great homegrown Rockies shortstop, Troy Tulowitzki, year two has been a significant struggle. Story's already dangerous strikeout rate has ticked up, and his pop-up rate has nearly doubled. Those changes have caused his batting average to crater, and he's also hitting for less power.

Outfield: Kyle Schwarber, Cubs (ADP: 77)
Lots of strikeouts, lots of pop-ups, and lack of footspeed is a combination that all but guarantees a player will be a batting average liability, but nobody expected Schwarber to be hitting under .180 at the break. He just returned from a demotion to the minors, and the Cubs will need him to get back on track if they're going to defend their title.

metro.us/horoscopes

Aries Make changes to the way you handle your job, responsibilities and the people you care about most. Don't let anger step in and take control. Offer positive alternatives.

Taurus If you want to make changes, you are best off doing so secretively. Once you have everything in place and running functionally, the choices you made will be well received.

Gemini Personal improvements will help boost your confidence and give you the wherewithal to pursue your goals. Update your skills and new possibilities will develop.

Cancer A bargain isn't worth it if you don't have enough cash. Don't waste money on things you don't need. Emotionally fueled spending will result in added stress.

Leo Go over any contracts and financial matters that need to be tidied up. Knowing where you stand will ease stress and give you a chance to start something new.

Virgo Use innovative methods to take care of demanding people or burdensome responsibilities. It's how you approach others that will make a difference.

Libra Question anything that appears to be sketchy or doesn't add up. It's important to stay on top of the facts and to be precise when dealing with uncertainty or instability.

Scorpio Make a point to take better care of your health. Avoid indulgence, and strive to work and play equally hard. Balance will be the key to lowering stress.

Sagittarius Don't count on the information that someone offers. You'll be railroaded into a situation that isn't in your best interest. Choose intelligence over bravado.

Capricorn Don't walk away from someone or something just because you are shy or fear the unfamiliar. The knowledge and experience you gain will motivate you.

Aquarius Listen carefully when dealing with partners. Someone is likely to leave out pertinent information to avoid upsetting you. Ask pointed questions and make changes.

Pisces Emotions will surface that could easily cost you if you aren't honest about your feelings or expectations with someone you deal with today. EUGENIA LAST
